CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE,

FRIENDS OF THE BURIED WORKMEN SURROUND THE CAISSON.

The Effect of the News that One of the Bodies had been Found-Arranging for the Iden-tification and Burial of the Victims.

The announcement published in THE SUN of yesterday that the skeleton of one of the workmen who were buried beneath the fallen roof of the Hudson River tunnel had been discovered attracted a great throng of spectators to the foot of Fifteenth street, Jersey City. Stout ropes were stretched around the coffer dam in which the caisson is sunk to prevent the men, women, and children who had collected there from interfering with the work. The latter, unable to see anything except the huge mud-spouting contrivance on top of the caisson, contented themselves by sitting on the piles of lumber in the vicinity and watching for developments. County Physician Converse was among the earliest visitors to the shaft. For the sake of economy, he some time ago decided that only one inquest should be held, and that the verdict of the jury in that case should be taken as determining the questions involved in the cases of all the victims. On learning yesterday that the body which had been reached could not be extricated for several days from the debris with which it is surrounded, the County Physician went away and took no steps toward beginning an inquest yet, Superintendent Anderson, who was directing the operations of the men engaged in excavating when the skeleton was found, related the particulars to a reporter for THE SUN.

"I was talking to Mr. Fowler, the secretary of the company," he said, "at about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when Moore, the lockman, who carries messages to and from the interior of the caisson, came to us and said that one of the bodies had been found. I went down to the place indicated. Through a hole made by the place indicated. Through a hole made by the breaking apart of two iron plates that had been boited together I felt something smooth. I worked away the mud from around it and the air pressure was increased by my direction. The air forced away the mud and water and I saw the skull and left the mouth and ever sockets. When the pressure of the air was diminished the head was again covered with water and again became invisible. Before the accident the plates of the roof were sustained by upright bosts that rested against the plates on the floor. Now, when the tunnel caved in the posts remained in bostion, but the plates were twisted around them in the shape of the cover of an umbrella around its stick. Two of these plates at the teo of a post were severed and bent so that through the hole thus made the skull could be seen when the water was lowered by the air pressure. The body is supposed to be in an erect position, and it will require several days of hard work before we can get it out.

We have made very complete arrangements," said Secretary Fowler, for the proper interment of the bodies. It may be well for the friends of the dead men to know how we intend to proceed in the matter. We have engaged Hugh Coyle, an undertaker and morgue keeper, to bury the remains. As the bodies are recovered they will be taken to his morgue for recognition, if possible, by friends and relatives. The friends of those whose bodies may be identified will be allowed to take charge of the funerals, but the bodies which are not recognized will be decently buried by the company in the Wechawken Cemetery, where we have purchased lots for that purpose. It is useless for sorrowing relatives to come here in the expectation of seeing their dead, for the bodies will not be exposed here at all, as we have no conveniences in this place. Every particle of clothing found on a body will be carefully preserved to assist in the identification. As the bodies are taken from the earth they will be placed on a board and wrapped up in canvas folds, like mu breaking apart of two iron plates that had been bolted together I felt something smooth. Brooklyn, who was arrested on Tuesday, was yesterday identified as the woman who, by representing herself as a Mrs. Tilden of 91 Cook street, victimized a number of dry goods dealers. She ordered a bill of goods from Henry Batterman, a dry goods dealer at 587 Broad-way, and after selecting $6.42 worth of goods, for which she said she had immediate use, she ordered the remainder to be sent to her house. where she said she would pay the bill. When Mr. Batterman and others of the woman's victims hunted for her they failed to find her. The description obtained from the various shopkeepers corresponded so closely with that of a woman whom Detective Thorne saw go into the house at 37 Hopkins street, on Tuesday, that he procured a grocer's clerk, who had given the woman goods that she took away without paying for them, to go with him to the house. Mrs. Reitzer was identified by the clerk, and was yesterday recognized by other complainants. She is a siender young woman, about nineteen years old, and she has been married only eight months.

Four separate complaints of petit larceny were yesterday preferred against her before Justice Semier. She said that she had not stolen the goods, and that her only offence was not paying for them. She added that she expected to pay for them. When asked what impelied her to pursue this method of obtaining goods she said that she was soon to become a mother, and as she did not have the means to provide clothing for her babe, she took this way to get it. She had cut the dry goods obtained up into baby suits, which she was making up. She had pawned a number of the articles to get money to pay physicians. She said that her husband was a poor chemist. She told him that the goods she brought home were gifts from friends, or that she had purchased them with her own earnings.

She was held by Justice Semier in $500 bonds keepers corresponded so closely with that of her own earnings. She was held by Justice Semler in $500 bonds to await examination. The complainants against Mrs. Relizer are William Resembush, a clerk for Henry Batterman of 557 Broadway; Jacob Betz of 702 Flushing avenue, who lost $1.60 worth of goods, and John Deshert of 197 Throop avenue, who lost $1.25 worth of goods.

Harlem Small-Pox Cases Dr Taylor, in his report to the Health Board on the small-pox cases in Harlem, says that an 8-year old girl in a family named Helion, in the tenement at 107 East 100th street, first caucht the disease. This was in August. A D- Smith treated her ostensibly for malaria fever. When she, as was supposed, had recovered, she played with the other children in the house and neighborhood, and presently attended the neighboring public school. Two children in the same house, named Samark, got the same disease, and were treated by Dr. Ellison also for malaria lever. When one of them died their physician apparently suspected his diagnosts, and reported the symptoms to Dr. Taylor, who recognized them as those of small-pox. The remaining child was removed to the Riverside Heapital where it thed. Previously a small, passed Heapital where it thed.
